CHAPTER I

STATEMENT OF THE PROBLEM

The problem with which this research is concerned is to make an analysis of people in seven fifth grade American history textbooks of recent publication and to note what period of their lives is reported.

Since the textbook still has, in many schools a very great influence in instruction, in this subject, it is imperative that a judicious choice be made. The child's conception of a character as studied in one textbook may be quite different from that as studied in a different text.

This analysis takes into consideration first, the actual number of words devoted in each text to each individual; and second, whether or not the events described took place in childhood, youth, or adulthood of the individual concerned.

This study endeavors to show the variation of seven history textbooks in their treatment of the people mentioned.

CHAPTER I

THEORY OF THE EARTH

The earth is a sphere, and its surface is divided into two parts, the land and the water.

The land is divided into continents and islands, and the water into oceans and seas.

The continents are the large masses of land, and the islands are the small pieces of land.

The oceans are the large bodies of water, and the seas are the smaller bodies of water.

The earth is covered with a thin layer of soil, which is the result of the decay of rocks.

The soil is divided into different layers, and each layer has its own characteristics.

The different layers of soil are called horizons, and they are numbered from the surface down.

The first horizon is the top layer of soil, and it is the most fertile.

The second horizon is the layer of soil just below the first, and it is less fertile.

The third horizon is the layer of soil just below the second, and it is the least fertile.

The fourth horizon is the layer of soil just below the third, and it is the least fertile.

The fifth horizon is the layer of soil just below the fourth, and it is the least fertile.

The sixth horizon is the layer of soil just below the fifth, and it is the least fertile.

The seventh horizon is the layer of soil just below the sixth, and it is the least fertile.

The eighth horizon is the layer of soil just below the seventh, and it is the least fertile.

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF THE LITERATURE

Much has been written in regard to the influence of men of merit and otherwise on the remarkable progress of our democracy. The aim in the fifth grade is to give the child, informally, some general idea of the beginnings and development of our country to serve as the basis of a more detailed study later. The core of the fifth grade course is the study of the lives of pioneers, early statesmen, soldiers, and inventors.

A related study by Cornforth states:¹

"Men may make events and events may make men. Which-ever may be the case, men hold an important place in recording history. Probably the impression made by the study of the lives of famous men is one of the greatest factors in modeling the character of the growing child. Not all boys want to become presidents of the United States but there is very seldom a child who does not have hero worship for some great personage during early childhood or the adolescent period. Therefore, it is of great importance in relating events to place the emphasis upon the personages where that emphasis is due rather than upon any large number of people of lesser importance."

History, the knowledge we have of our past, can be a driving force which often determines our actions. Every situation in which we find ourselves, every event that takes place, is the result of certain historical developments and actions of individuals.

// The biographic emphasis has won recognition among education theorists. Witness these statements gleaned from important articles on the subject:¹

"Spirited biographies make history live since events and actions hinge upon individuals. History is a network of biographies for it is made by the lives of men."²

"As a point from which quickening forces radiate, no subject serves better than biography."³

"Since it is natural for people to turn to leaders in moments of crisis, it becomes important for educators to turn to biography and examine the role it is playing in the educational process."⁴

"After all, the most important thing in the education of children is to get their minds working, to stimulate their interest. And is there any subject in the world that more arouses the child than the story of men's and women's lives? Who did these great things that we are asked to study about? Who though great thoughts and fought great fights and did great services to humanity; and how did they do it and why did they do it? Tell us about it and, above all, tell us how we can do the same thing, or something of the same, and why in the world we should not."⁵

"The possibilities of biography in education may, however, be utilized to an even greater extent. The individual human being is the center of the world, and, perhaps, no better key can be found to help human beings to understand the world. The human being is all of history. He makes it or is made by it. There are no richer clues to the great movements of history than personalities. The same is true in other fields of human interest. In literature, in art, in science, in religion, there is always the man. Get at him and learn to know him and the pupil will have a greater interest and the work a new significance."⁶

Today educators are aware of the fact that an interest in past events and the people involved in them must be created early in the child's life and carried over into adult life in order to eradicate the political lethargy that exists in America today.

Professor John J. Mahoney of Boston University cites as an example that the average score of 5,000 high school seniors in a test which required them to identify certain prominent people of the day was 45 per cent.⁷

If an interest is created by the mention of even one famous name in a history textbook, the child might be ambitious enough to read a complete biography of that person.

To have a pupil so inspired it is essential that the teacher of this subject teach with conviction for as Hullfish says:⁸"....This is the time to recognize that when we can teach with conviction.....young people will learn with conviction. The quality of the educative process is strictly the responsibility of those who teach....."

The incentive is greater when you can point out to the children that lives of great men are interesting enough to be used as the basis of a movie. The trend in recent years has been to portray on the stage and screen the lives of such famous people among them people of historical importance as Pasteur, Madame Curie, Woodrow Wilson, Jimmy Doolittle, Abraham Lincoln, and others.

Among the best-sellers, biographies are very popular. To quote from Alice Dixon Bond's article:⁹ "Biography and memoirs presented great riches this year, with Ellery Sedgwick's "The Mason's "Brandeis," Mark Schorer's "William Blake," Matthew Josephson's "Stendahl," and Hesketh Pearson's "Oscar Wilde" presenting the most lasting values."

Furthermore, "A glance at the library withdrawal cards shows biography competing in close second with fiction both for adults and juveniles," reports Lillian Hollowell.¹⁰

Authorities who have direct contact with the juvenile market of books and children themselves agree that the chief factors making for the continued success of biography are these: (1)the world in which we live; (2)the fascinating subject matter; (3)the popular but authentic style whereby the author shows not only his skill as a writer but a sympathetic feeling for his subject; and (4)the distinguished format, type and price.¹¹

Reed Smith has most fittingly said: "In a period of doubt and skepticism we need solace and stimulus for our soul's sake. It is a blessed relief, when we are borne down with discouragement and failure, to turn to the records of lives that have been lived through and that can be looked at in perspective."¹²

The study of these characters need not be reserved solely for history lessons where knowledge of events of historical importance are stressed, but they could be profitably referred to in vocational guidance lessons and character training lessons as well.

"A by-product of inspirational literature of any type is the enrichment of character. What can teach tolerance, sympathy, admiration for the great and good, worthy ambitions, a sense of human fellowship and world brotherhood better than the reading of inspiring biographies of men and women who have moved the race forward and furnished our best examples of noble conduct."¹³

Following this line of thought is the statement made by Dr. Henry E. Sigerist of Johns Hopkins University in his radio broadcast of November 10, 1946, when under the sponsorship of the United States Rubber Company he said,

"Every profession needs heroes, men whose example we can follow. Whoever has engaged in scientific research has experienced moments of profound despair, when every experiment went wrong, or the results could not be understood. In such moments we remember men like Copernicus who struggled to create a new astronomy, or Galileo who founded a new physics despite persecution, or Lavoisier, the father of modern chemistry who was beheaded at the time of the French Revolution, or Edward Jenner whose vaccine saved hundreds of thousands of human lives. Remembering such men, our faith and courage are renewed."¹⁴

Further proof that greater emphasis must be placed on an interest in people is given in the excerpt from the excellent editorial of Uncle Dudley which follows:

"We do not know enough. We do not know enough of that which it is quite possible to know. Most of us do not know enough about the easily accessible historic records of how brave men and wise women and steadfast artists and clear-headed thinkers have faced epochs of social change highly similar to our own, and who have either, like Vergil and Caesar Augustus, brought some order out of chaos, or, like Plato and Thucydides, have salvaged from the wreck of a noble civilization enough creative ideas to serve as a quarry from which to hew and build our modern world.

Our modern world is not washed up. These problems of today are new in scale, but not in kind. They are bigger than ever before; they are not essentially different. They have been faced in age after age by heroic men and women whose names are well known, whose deeds are recorded, whose thoughts are accessible in any public library. Their experience goes back at least three thousand years; some of them won their struggle, some lost; but in the very struggle itself something is always won. There the record stands. It is our heritage. Why not claim it?"¹⁵

The analysis of people in fifth grade American history textbooks is important. The one best book, or a combination of books, will serve as a means of providing the child with a connected story of the origin and development of our country considered preferably from the biographical point of view. An effective program should create an attitude of increasing love and respect for our country and a desire to be a worthy citizen. A continued interest in people will bring its reward in adult life when the satisfaction of being an active participant in discussions of current events will be felt.

PROCEDURE USED IN THE INVESTIGATION

The following fifth grade American history textbooks of recent publication were used in this study:

Barker, Eugene C., Alsger, Marie, and Webb, Walter P., The Story of Our Country. New York:

Beeby, Daniel J., Hanna, Joyce L., and McLure, C. H., Our Country. Chicago: Laidlaw Brothers, 1942.

Jarrold, Rachel M., and Riddell, Isabel W., Land of Freedom. New York:

Kelty, Mary G., Life in Modern America. Boston: Ginn and Compnay, 1941.

Lawler, Thomas Bonaventure, Builders of America. Boston: Ginn and Company, 1945.

McGuire, Edna, America, Then and Now. Boston: The Macmillan Company, 1940.

Townsend, Herbert, Our America. Boston: Allyn and Bacon, 1944.

Each book was analyzed separately to determine how much space was allotted to each person. In order to facilitate the word count the average number of words in each line was found by choosing at random a paragraph of ten solid lines; and the total number of words in these lines was divided by ten i.e., in Life in Modern America by Mary G. Kelty there were 107 words in the total of ten lines making an average of 10.7 words per line.

If a certain character required a coverage of thirty-six lines, the average 10.7 was multiplied by thirty six, and the

THEORY OF THE EARTH

The following table gives a summary of the principal theories of the origin of the earth.

These theories are based on the following principles:

1. The earth is a sphere, and its surface is covered by water.

2. The earth is composed of various layers, the outermost of which is the crust.

3. The earth is surrounded by a thin layer of atmosphere.

4. The earth is subject to various forces, such as gravity, which tend to shape its surface.

5. The earth is subject to various changes, such as the growth of mountains and the sinking of land.

6. The earth is subject to various disturbances, such as earthquakes and volcanic eruptions.

7. The earth is subject to various influences, such as the action of the sun and the moon.

8. The earth is subject to various laws, such as the law of conservation of matter.

9. The earth is subject to various principles, such as the principle of causality.

10. The earth is subject to various theories, such as the theory of evolution.

11. The earth is subject to various hypotheses, such as the hypothesis of a universal flood.

12. The earth is subject to various conjectures, such as the conjecture of a universal deluge.

13. The earth is subject to various speculations, such as the speculation of a universal catastrophe.

14. The earth is subject to various surmises, such as the surmise of a universal disaster.

total was placed in column one. Whenever an incomplete line was encountered, due perhaps to an illustration interfering with the paragraph, an accurate count of the words in that partial line was made.

If a character were treated at length in one location in the textbook and additional mention was made of him in connection with other events, the grand total of these events is the number recorded in column one, Table I.

This study also records by means of a check mark in the proper column whether reference was made by the authors to events that took place when the person was a child, youth, or an adult.

The following analysis was made of each textbook:

1. An actual count was made in each text of the number of times a person was mentioned; and the words used to describe that character and his participation in various events were counted and recorded in column one.

2. An asterisk was placed in the necessary columns to indicate whether mention was made of a person when he was a child, a youth, or an adult.

The above data is recorded in Table I through Table VII.

Table VIII is an alphabetical list of all the characters in all the seven books. In this list of 362 names a person is given consideration only if ten or more words were used in the description of his action in the text.

Any name that was just mentioned in passing was not included. In the combined master list each book is identified by a letter. The list follows:

- J--Jarrold, Rachel M., and Riddell, Isabel W., Land of Freedom. New York: W. H. Sadlier Inc., 1941.
- K--Kelty, Mary G., Life in Modern America. Boston: Ginn and Company, 1941.
- L--Lawler, Thomas B., Builders of America. Boston: Ginn and Company, 1945.

- U--Beeby, Daniel J., Hanna, Joyce L., and McLure, C. H., Our Country. Chicago: Laidlaw Brothers, 1942.

Table IX enumerates the first twenty names of prominence according to the superiority of word count in each textbook.

Table X Presents the names of those whose complete biographies were reported in each book.

Table XI reports the names of people whose complete biographies were recorded in certain books. In the majority of cases these are the best known Americans who the child hears mentioned from the earliest days of his school life.

Tables XII, XIII, and XIV are self-explanatory, presenting numerical statistics for all the textbooks used in this study.

CHAPTER IV

HISTORICAL CHARACTERS IN SEVEN FIFTH-GRADE HISTORY TEXTBOOKS

The tables in this chapter contain the data for each of the seven recent fifth-grade American history textbooks analyzed for the purposing of recording the number of words used to describe the activities of certain historical characters, and noting whether the actions took place when the person was a child, youth, or adult.

In Table I the results of the analysis of the historical characters in "The Story of Our Country" by Eugene C. Barker, Marie Alsage, and Walter P. Webb published by Row, Peterson and Company of New York copyright date 1943 are recorded.

THEORY OF THE EARTH - A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE EARTH

The earth is a planet of the solar system. It is the third planet from the sun and the only one known to support life. The earth is a sphere, about 12,756 km in diameter, and is composed of a solid inner core, a liquid outer core, and a solid mantle. The crust is the thin outer layer of the earth, and is composed of rocks and minerals. The atmosphere is the layer of gases surrounding the earth, and is composed of nitrogen, oxygen, and other gases. The hydrosphere is the layer of water surrounding the earth, and is composed of oceans, lakes, and rivers. The biosphere is the layer of life surrounding the earth, and is composed of plants and animals.

TABLE VI

In Table VI the results of the analysis of the historical characters in "America Then And Now", by Edna McGuire, published by The Macmillan Co., 1940, 423 pp. are recorded.

The first part of the report is a general introduction to the project. It describes the purpose of the study, the objectives, and the scope of the work. The second part is a literature review, which discusses the current state of knowledge in the field and identifies the gaps that the study aims to fill. The third part is the methodology, which describes the research design, the data collection methods, and the analysis techniques. The fourth part is the results, which presents the findings of the study. The fifth part is the conclusion, which summarizes the main findings and discusses their implications. The final part is the references, which lists the sources used in the study.

Table VII presents the data with which this study is concerned in the fifth grade American history textbook entitled "Our America", by Herbert Townsend, published by Allyn and Bacon, Boston, copyright 1944, 198 pp.

Abstract

The purpose of this study was to investigate the effects of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary middle-aged adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial involving 60 participants, who were assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group participated in a supervised exercise program consisting of aerobic and strength training, while the control group remained sedentary. Data were collected at baseline and after 12 weeks. The results showed that the training group had significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and health-related quality of life compared to the control group.

Variable	Baseline	12 Weeks
Cardiovascular fitness (VO2 max)	20.5 ± 2.5	25.5 ± 2.5
Muscle strength (1RM)	100 ± 10	120 ± 10
Health-related quality of life (SF-36)	45 ± 5	55 ± 5

CHAPTER V

RESULTS AND CONCLUSIONS

Seven of the most recent fifth grade American history textbooks were analyzed to determine who were the people in them and what area of their lives was reported. These books were published between 1941 and 1945. It was found that the greatest number of people were recorded in a book of 1943 publication, whereas the book which gave the most thorough treatment to its few characters was published in 1941.

The evidence which is presented on the following pages proves that the majority of people mentioned in these books achieved distinction because of the deeds they performed as adults. A minority of characters had their entire biographies presented.

BOOK J .

Table III representing Book J presented the fewest number of characters. Of the 70 people mentioned in this book, 26 were explorers. The total number of words used by the authors of this book to describe the activities of the 70 characters was 22,297, resulting in an average of 319 words per person.

In regard to the span of life referred to, the following people were mentioned in youth and adulthood:

Hernando Cortes	Prince Henry

LONDON, Printed by J. Streater, at the Sign of the Gun, in St. Dunstons Church-yard, in the Parish of St. Dunstons, in the County of Middlesex, 1680.

One character, Pocahontas, was referred to in youth only.

As recorded in Table X, the following people had their complete biographies reported:

Christopher Columbus
John Smith
Peter Stuyvesant
George Washington

The remaining 60 people received considerable mention because of their deeds in adult life.

The era covered in this book does not extend up to the time of the inventors, consequently, this book varies from the other books which all included some inventors, as will be proven by referring to Table VIII.

BOOK K

Table IV presents the facts considered in this study of Book K. This book differed most widely from all the books used and this fact is best proved by referring to Table VIII where the names of all the people in all the books are recorded. It will be noted that 60 names appearing in this book appear in no other book. As its title implies, "Life in Modern America" is confined to a later era of history. This book was nevertheless recommended for use in grade five by the publisher's representative.

There were 149 people mentioned in this book none of whom were early explorers. The author used 13,421 words in relating the activities of these people. Although this book deals with a little more than the average number of people (135), it employs the use of the fewest number of words, namely, 13,421, resulting in an average of 90 words for each person.

In reporting on the span of life of the characters in this book the conclusion drawn is that the author was concerned with their actions in adult life only, with the exception of four whose biographies were completely recorded. They were:

Andrew Carnegie
Thomas A. Edison
Andrew Jackson
Abraham Lincoln

In Table V the data of Book L is recorded. This book is similar in content to the majority of the textbooks used in this study. It includes the names of 133 people of historical importance which is close to the average of 135. A total of 37,211 words was used by the author to describe the events with which these people were concerned, giving an average of 280 words to each person.

In studying the table for the span of life treated by the author, it is found that only Alexander Graham Bell was referred to in childhood and adulthood. Several characters were referred to in youth and adulthood. They were:

George Rogers Clark
Leif Ericson
Cyrus Field
Elias Howe
John Paul Jones
Francis Scott Key
Charles Lindbergh
Cyrus McCormick
Marco Polo

The Wright Brothers

Those whose brief biography was reported were:

Christopher Columbus
Thomas A. Edison
Benjamin Franklin
Andrew Jackson
Abraham Lincoln
George Washington

All the other 107 people were referred to in adult life only.

BOOK M

The data in Table VI reveals the fact that Book M more nearly attains the average in every way than any of the other books. The 153 people described by a total of 25,162 words agree with the names of the other books used in this study. Only 14 names appear in this book that are not duplicated in any of the other books. This fact is verified by a study of Table VIII, the composite list of all characters. The average number of words for each person in this book of Edna McGuire's is 164, which more nearly approaches the general average of 196 words per book than any of the other six books.

In classifying the characters in this book according to the area of life that was recorded, it is apparent that only

Cyrus McCormick and William Penn were mentioned in childhood and adulthood.

Many characters had reference made to their youth and adulthood. They were:

Alexander Graham Bell
Daniel Boone
Jefferson Davis
Robert E. Lee
Samuel F.B. Morse
Marco Polo

In enumerating the names of those whose complete biographies are related in this book, Table X contains these names:

Susan B. Anthony
Thomas A. Edison
Ulysses S. Grant
Sam Houston
Andrew Jackson
Abraham Lincoln
Theodore Roosevelt

The remaining 138 characters were mentioned because of their achievements in various fields of endeavor as adults.

BOOK T

Table VII records the data of Book T.

In this textbook the activities of 149 people of historical importance are described in 14,579 words, giving an average of 99 words to each.

Eight characters were given complete biographies. These are recorded in Table X.

One person, Virginia Dare, was referred to in childhood only.

One person, Pocahontas, was referred to in youth only.

All other persons (139) were mentioned as adults.

An analysis of the contents of Table VIII reveals the fact that twelve people were included in this book who were not included in any other book.

BOOK U

Table II records the statistics gathered from Book U in which 116 people were dealt with in 31,130 words, giving an average of 268 words to each person. This book ranks third highest in word count and in the average number of words, although it relates the deeds of the second lowest number of people of historical importance. These facts are gleaned from a study of Table XII.

In regard to the span of life covered, the following people were mentioned in childhood and adulthood:

Samuel de Champlain
Robert Fulton
William Penn
Eli Whitney

Reference was made to the youth and adulthood of Captain Lewis and Captain Clark, his co-worker.

Seven characters whose entire life was reported are recorded in Table X.

All the remaining 103 characters were referred to in adult life only.

The first of these is the "General" or "Common" law.

The second is the "Particular" or "Local" law.

The third is the "Special" or "Particular" law.

The fourth is the "Mixed" or "Composite" law.

The fifth is the "Mixed" or "Composite" law.

BOOK Y

Table I reports the statistics with which this study is concerned in Book Y. This book describes the activities of 171 people of historical importance in 40,348 words. The number of people in this book exceeded the average of 135 as stated in Table XII. The average number of words per person in this book was 236. In regard to their span of life, the following people were mentioned in childhood and adulthood:

Woodrow Wilson
John Paul Jones
Elias Howe
Andrew Jackson
Henry Ford
John C. Calhoun

These people attained mention in their youth and adulthood:

King Charles I
Buffalo Bill (W.E. Cody)
Marco Polo
General Robert E. Lee
Marquis de Lafayette
Pocahontas
Captain John Smith
General W.T. Sherman
Daniel Webster

The following people were honored by having their entire span of life mentioned and reported in Table X

Christopher Columbus
Benjamin Franklin
Samuel F.B. Morse
Thomas A. Edison
Abraham Lincoln
Anna Howard Shaw
Eli Whitney

All the other 144 people were mentioned because of their achievements as adults only.

REVELATIONS OF TABLE VIII

Table VIII records all the names arranged in alphabetical order which appear on all the lists.

By referring to this list the person interested in doing so can determine which names appeared in the majority of the texts. The grand total of 362 names which appear on this list is a little more than double the average number of names which appear in Table XII. The average number of names in that list is 135 people per book.

George Washington's name is the only one included in all books. Christopher Columbus was written up in detail in all books except "Life in Modern America" by Mary G. Kelty. In fact, all the explorers are included in all the books except "Life in Modern America", which is very aptly named. Reference to the following people is also omitted in this book: William Penn, Powhatan, Roger Williams and General James Wolfe, but they are all mentioned in every one of the other six books.

"Land of Freedom" dealt with the fewest number of people, so it is not surprising to note that it alone omitted reference to Thomas A. Edison, General U.S. Grant, Alexander Hamilton, Andrew Jackson, Sam Houston, General Robert E. Lee, Meriwether Lewis, Abraham Lincoln, Guglielmi Marconi, Samuel Morse, Oliver H. Perry, F.D. Roosevelt, Daniel Webster, Eli Whitney, Woodrow Wilson and the Wright Brothers.

SIGNIFICANCE OF TABLE IX

In Table IX can be found the most prominent names according to superiority of word count in each book.

An interesting feature is the comparison of names on those lists.

Christopher Columbus ranked first in the amount of space accorded to him in five of the seven books. He was superseded by Benjamin Franklin in "Builders of America", and he was not listed among the twenty most prominent people in "Life in Modern America."

George Washington ranked second in three of the seven books, fourth in a fourth list, tenth in another list, and the number of words accorded him in "Life in Modern America" and "Land of Freedom" did not warrant him a place among the names of the twenty most prominent people in those books.

Abraham Lincoln was awarded first place in one book, third place in three books, and seventh place in another book. He was not listed among the twenty men of prominence in "The Story of Our Country" and he was not mentioned at all in "Land of Freedom."

There was considerable agreement in the various lists of people of prominence.

TABLE X

This table reveals the fact that only a small percentage of the characters in each book had their entire biographies reported.

Eight biographies were reported in "The Story of Our Country" and in "Our America."

The total number of words used to write the eight biographies in "The Story of Our Country" was 17% of the total number of words for all the 171 characters in the book.

Of the two women to achieve the distinction of having their biographies written in any of the seven books used, one was Anna Howard Shaw who was born in England one hundred years ago. She came to Massachusetts when she was a child and struggled to fulfill her ambition to become a preacher, a doctor and a lecturer for women's rights. In the course of her training she studied at Boston University.

In "Our Country" seven characters had their biographies reported in a total of 7,130 words, which was 23% of the total number used to describe the 116 characters in this book.

In "Land of Freedom" only four characters had their biographies presented in a total of 4,763 words, which was 21% of the total number of words used to record the activities of the 70 people in the book.

"Life in Modern America" reported the biographies of only four people in 20% of all the words used to describe the deeds of the 149 people in this book.

Six of the 133 people in "Builders of America" had their biographies recorded in a total of 10,127 words, which was 21% of the total number of words used to describe the characters in this book.

Seven people, one of them a woman, Susan B. Anthony, had their biographies presented in "America Then and Now". The total number of words used to record these biographies was 5,715 which was 23% of the total number of words used to tell of the activities of the 153 people in this book.

The eight people in "Our America" who had their brief biographies reported required the use of 22% of the total number of words for all the 148 people in this recent book.

TABLE XI

An analysis of this table shows which people of historical importance had their biographies duplicated in various books.

Abraham Lincoln's biography appeared in six books. The only book which did not mention him was, as has been explained before, "Land of Freedom", a book which dealt with a limited era of history.

Christopher Columbus, George Washington, and Thomas Edison had their biographies reported in five of the seven books used in this study. In dealing with these three individuals the authors showed the greatest measure of agreement.

The statistics in Tables XII, XIII, and XIV are self explanatory and show at a glance the general conclusions that may be drawn from such a study.

One apparent fact is that the 70 people in "Land of Freedom" received the most thorough treatment, with an average of 319 words for each person.

The book which attained first place in both the number of people dealt with and the number of words allotted them was "The Story of Our Country".

A reader of this study might ask what practical conclusions can be made from it. As stated in the problem, one of the aims in presenting this data was that it would serve teachers not only in indicating the variation in textbooks but also in showing which ones will serve as good references for further material on certain historical characters.

Since there were only seven fifth grade American history textbooks of recent publication available for use in this study, the writer is in agreement with those who would like to enlarge the historical textbook field. To quote from Steinberg, "With the passing of the war emergency which blinded so many educational leaders to the necessity for continued emphasis on the liberal arts subject, we may once again see curricular time devoted to our cultural heritage and to its corresponding concern with leaders of thought and action. In this revaluation the textbook writers may see fit to play down historian's history and assign a greater role to personality in history."¹³

This analysis suggested further studies in closely related areas. It would be interesting to select a similar number of textbooks at another grade level and analyze them to find out if more emphasis is placed on people in books written for older children.

Steinberg, op. cit. p. 486

A further development would be to study history textbooks to determine which ones offer the best supplemental teaching aids, as maps, tables, graphs and objective tests.

The writer freely admits that something of real value could be found among the seven fifth grade American history textbooks analyzed for the purpose of enumerating the names of the characters in them and the area of their lives mentioned. Using books of recent date was a refreshing experience, because the ingeniousness of some of the authors and the presentation of their methods certainly raised history books to a level not known or anticipated in the writer's fifth grade school days.
